

Copper surface in mono-, di- and triethanolamine solutions

© Liliya R. Safina,+ Alexandr M. Shapnik, and Tamara P. Petrova*

Inorganic chemistry chair. Kazan state technology university. K.Marx St., 68. Kazan, 420015. Russia.

Phone: +7 (843) 231-40-41. E-mail: safinalr@yandex.ru

---

*Supervising author; +Corresponding author

Keywords: electroreflection modulation spectroscopy, monoethanolamine, diethanolamine, triethanolamine, oxide films formation.

Abstract

The copper surface state depends upon the aminoethanol nature and electrode potential. By electroreflection modulation spectroscopy it was determined that the minimal boundary aminoethanol concentration preventing copper oxide films formation increases in the series of mono-, di- and triethanolamine with hydroxylic groups in the molecule.